Screenshots: Ask A Question You need to be logged in to ask a question. Please register and log in.On Unbelievable Size, a Review of James Dawkins's _The Irresistible Erotic_ James Dawkins's anthology, _The Irresistible Erotic_, is, perhaps, the most useful anthology of the erotica genre. It's a slim, compact volume with a minimum of almost no text, which makes it as elegant, lasting, and memorable a product as a could wish for. It is, in other words, not easy to come by. Those who have something like an aversion to erotica should not feel compelled to plunge headlong into the book. All it is is a collection of erotica from the past 50 years, though, and, happily, everything is still rather good. The author divides the work into six sections: The Real Thing, School of Love, Angels, Harnessed Dreams, Lovers in the Dark, and Lovers on Ecstasy. In the first part of the book, he gives us (page after page of) love letters, both hot and plain, to help us understand how and where the American erotic imagination has come from. I'd love to be able to say more about it, but unfortunately I have neither been to college nor have I read extensively on the subject. Perhaps I'm just not up to it, but a book that I found quite fascinating after reading the first few pages is simply a definition of erotic literature and how it has been used historically, both in male/female relationships as well as with relations to the divine. The second section of the book is the one that I wish I'd been able to talk about, since it includes some excellent works. Most of the pieces in this section are found, without a doubt, in _Ode to Love_, by Norman Mailer. He gives us his attempts at lyrics on the idea of love and passion, and he even goes as far to talk about the ideas of history and the passage of time when it comes to love. (He even has it compared to the passage of time, a concept that had never occurred to me before.) In between are pieces that might have looked better if he'd been able to work them around in a more natural order, but, as it stands, they go into order from the earliest work to the most recent. The first part of that is the best.

App Disclaimer: The idea of a bedtime story delivered via an app is not original to me. The first app that I can think of was RapSeek. And the idea predates both RapSeek and Tumblr by at least a decade. As the man-child trying desperately to learn which buttons launch each vulgar taunt or swear word, I am unsurprisingly impressed by the sophistication of my children. Some of the most advanced technology around is currently being used in the simple act of asking, "What's Daddy doing this weekend?" and receiving an answer. This is really important, because without exception, the events and accomplishments listed below have all taken place in my leisure time on an iPhone and/or iPad. And for guys, that's what dating apps are all about: booze, babes, and the occasional hook-up. We've already discussed the booze, check it out here. The 'babes' are well known to many of us and should be no revelation to the reader. And the hook-ups? Please feel free to leave your thoughts on the matter. Over the last decade, dating apps have become ubiquitous and eaten up such a substantial slice of the market that several major app creators have stuck together to create one larger company, Snap Inc. Below, the members of Snap Inc. are listed alphabetically by non-technical description on their own dating apps, all of which are now free to download in all app stores. Tinder: Tinder was the first dating app that made a percentage of its money through premium membership. The primary function of Tinder is user interest matching based on personality similarity and availability. Tinder also provides some dating searching functionality, mostly for casual encounters and hook-ups, which you'll see below under "Apps for Adult Stars and Hook-Ups." Tinder developed the most comprehensive matching technology on the market. It became the standard against which the others were judged. Tinder came out in 2012 and has now been downloaded over 5 million times. Tinder allows users to post a photo of themselves, albeit a relatively grainy one, on their profile. When another user likes your profile, you will be prompted to see if there's a mutual interest match. If there is, the two of you will have a chance to connect. This is where the "pigs," as they are commonly known among the Tinderverse, enter the equation. Each time you both like or chat (send each other a wink) you two will both be directed to the
