I have been going through this excellent book: The author talks about creating functions. I have a function to add a new Category and then a function to add a new class of that Category. I would assume this is the right way of doing it, but would like to have your opinion. The functions are named AddCategory and AddClass. In the default controller, the indexAction we created a function to add a new Category called AddCategory, and the View called Index when adding a new Category. Where should I begin to create functions like this? Should all functions on the controller end with an Action? Example: indexAction->addClass. Or should I just create the function in the model? Example: modle->add e79caf774b

Many types of scanning systems and scanning methods have been used for inspection of surfaces, for example, as described by P. P. Antoniou et al., "Scanning technology—Principles and practice", Springer-Verlag New York, 2002. A scanning method for inspecting objects is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,444,489 to Tserpak et al., which teaches a method for non-destructive testing of a material using a laser beam. The method uses the variation of the reflected beam intensity from the material to determine the surface characteristics of the material. One of the most important aspects in the inspection of cracks is the determination of the type, the location and the depth of the crack. The determination of crack type, location and depth has many important applications in many fields. For example, determination of crack type can be used for verification of the quality of a product, e.g. metal or mineral products, and determination of crack location can be used for determination of the location of a crack before further processing of the product, and for verification of the result of the processing. Prime Minister Theresa May said she will resign as soon as a successor is chosen, the fourth British leader to quit in the past year. May told members of Parliament on Wednesday afternoon that she wanted to formally stand down as soon as possible after Britain leaves the European Union in March. "I do not say this lightly," May said. "And you will have seen from this morning that it is a decision I have not taken lightly. But I feel that it is right to stand down as leader of the Conservative and Unionist Party in order to allow a new leader the chance to lead the party forward." May had promised to lead Britain until the next scheduled election in 2022 but she came under increasing pressure after her government failed to publish its long-awaited plan for the country's withdrawal from the EU, and was forced to set a date for Brexit that has become increasingly unrealistic
