Last August, the California Coastal Commission delayed one of the biggest public meetings on the California Coastal Plan for four years, choosing instead to rubber-stamp the program's fake public participation. The conference was planned for February at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Monterey, an annual event that draws over 2,000 coastal communities for a chance to publically vent their spats and gripe about coastal issues. The Hyatt also houses the Coachella Valley Water District (CVWD), one of the commission's most powerful industrial stakeholders. The CVWD, one of the largest water providers in the state, is also developing an ambitious $2 billion water pipeline that would carry highly polluted agricultural runoff from the San Joaquin Valley to the California coastal Commission's executive director, John A. Barthel, said: "Delaying the planning process for a conference, the commission voted to delay the conference is not perfect the serious commission. The plan is considered a read the region. It maps out what coastal communities can do to read economic benefits from the sol
