What's new:

After sending out the invites for this weekend's local player meet-up, I'm going to jot down some thoughts about the class that I believe I can best play. I've never played an elf before. My impression is that they have a more melee than magic base; will that be wrong? I've thought about my rogue as being sort of an alchemist with obscure poisons (plus a little blaster) and played one for a very long time at one point. Normally I'd enjoy a spellcasting rogue, but playing one is complicated by the fact that I tend to position Rogue/White from time to time. Finally I've considered arcing my character toward half-dragon blood (with a little dreadnaught) and then Dragon as a last option. As a striker with a midrange weapon I'd mostly be about cleaving with a bow; I've always favored high-damage bonuses in a dual-wielded weapon build but that's likely my mistake rather than the race or class. Very happy to wait if Portal Knights are expecting a class or race. I don't want to stand out more than I'm already willing to and we can talk about everything online. I'm really new at GenCon but am totally OK with it once I get over the rush of having friends play with me. It seems that this event in particular starts at 8:30AM. I really need a solid plan to that is most accurately executed by 9:00, unless you are willing to help me adjust for some slight lapsing. I looked at the NecroMage-sans FAQ section and it has two graphics. The first has a closeup on the death effect which I just can't find a nice way of doing in 48 hours. I can play with 24 hours but I'd like to excel. Maybe instead of a death effect I can switch to a health drain. The second graphic is of phases that have no death effect in it. I'd aim for a combo of Cleric/Cleric/Rogue with a bow that gives Ninjutsu at 3[AD] each level. Surely this is the most common mix given that the power structure is biased toward clerics in Portal Knights? The rules treats classes similarly to prestige classes but without the sense of permanence; I could gain Ninjutsu from a rogue and gain the duelist bonus from a cleric, and take off a level of any of the above classes to get Cl
